Honorable Stansfield Turner
Director of Central Intelligence
Central Intelligence Agency
Washington, D.C.

Dear Admiral Turner:

On 4 October 1977, Ikar Zavrazhnov, First Secretary of the Soviet Embassy, asked my executive assistant Scott Cohen to arrange a meeting with me for Sergey Chetverikov, Counselor of the Soviet Embassy. He said that Chetverikov had a message for me from "the Soviet leadership, not a substantive message, but a message."

Cohen phoned Mel Levitzky, Soviet Desk officer at the State Department, who suggested that I use the meeting to emphasize continuing concern about Soviet emigration policy and to express satisfaction that there had been some movement on SALT.

Chetverikov, Cohen and I met on 10 October 1977 at the Caucus Room in the Russell Senate Office Building where I was questioning witnesses in the Panama Canal hearing. After finishing the round of questioning, I walked with them out of the building toward the Capitol, stopping on a park bench on the Capitol grounds to talk.

I could not discern a "message" from the Soviet leadership other than Chetverikov's request that I arrange an informal meeting with Senators for the Supreme Soviet delegation expected in Washington in mid-January 1978. I said that I would do that.

To Chetverikov I expressed my pleasure that there is some progress in the SALT negotiations, that I would be glad to see Georgy Arbatov again if he came with the parliamentary delegation, and that I had noted with favor an upturn in the figures of Soviet emigration in recent months. I passed Chetverikov a letter (copy attached) asking for consideration of exit visas for a number of Soviet citizens seeking to emigrate to the United States or Israel. I told him that efforts for better Soviet-American relations would be encouraged if Soviet emigration this year could be allowed to increase to about 33,000.

Chetverikov had a list of recent emigres whose exit visas had been granted after interventions by United States Senators. He did not show me the list, but Cohen looked over his shoulder and saw the names of [redacted] and [redacted] among perhaps 15 names.

STAT

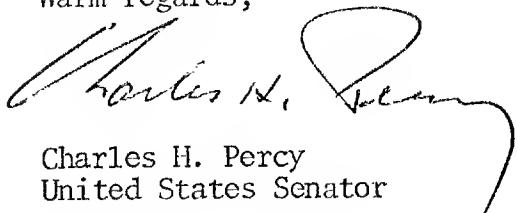

Chetverikov mentioned that Ambassador Dobrynin was returning to Moscow on 28 October, and said that Dobrynin would like to lunch with me one day before then. He said that Dobrynin would welcome me at the Soviet Embassy or at his home, or would be willing to come to Capitol Hill. Wives could be included if I wished. I responded that I would prefer him to come to my Senate office so I wouldn't miss any votes. Chetverikov said he would be in touch with Cohen to arrange a convenient date and time for the lunch.

After I took leave of Chetverikov, so I could go to the Senate floor to deliver a speech, Cohen walked back with him to my office.

There Chetverikov handed him a copy of Brezhnev's speech to the Supreme Soviet on 4 October 1977 and an unofficial translation from Russian of an 18 July 1977 letter to the Speaker of the House from A. Schitikov and V. Ruben of the Supreme Soviet transmitting an Appeal to Parliaments and Parliamentarians of the Signatory States of the CSCE Final Act.

I hope that you will find this information of interest.

Warm regards,

Charles H. Percy

Dear Mr. Chetverikov:

I am very grateful that in recent weeks we have received news that many Soviet citizens wishing to emigrate have been granted exit visas. This news has been welcomed with joy and gratitude by the families and friends of these individuals. Furthermore, I believe that this progress in emigration contributes to improved cooperation and understanding between our two countries.

It is in this spirit that I would like to bring to your attention a few emigration cases which are well known in my home state of Illinois. Some information about each case is provided in the enclosed list.

I would appreciate it if your home authorities could review these cases to determine if exit visas could be granted. With appreciation for your kind consideration, I am

Sincerely,
